It surely must represent a species complex rather than a single polytypic species. A comprehensive study of the geographic variation in coloration patterns and morphometric variables suggests that over thirty species may be involved (Peterson 2007). However, taxonomic revision of this complex still awaits a comprehensive vocal, ecological and phylogenetic analysis.

TAX, PHY	H. kauaiensis was a name proposed by Doug Pratt because when Kauai Amakihi is placed in Hemignathus , its original name, stejnegeri , is preoccupied by a subspecies of Greater Akialoa. That conflict no longer exists with placement of Kauai Amakihi in Chlorodrepanis and Greater Akialoa in Akialoa , so the older name is restored.

										Thlypopsis is expanded to include Pyrrhocomma and Hemispingus superciliaris (the type species for Hemispingus) which are embedded in that genus. Since Thlypopsis , Pyrrhocomma and Hemispingus were all described in the same work, Cabanis, 1851, Burns et al. (2016) act as first revisers in selecting Thlypopsis Cabanis, 1851, to take precedence over Pyrrhocomma Cabanis, 1851, and Hemispingus Cabanis, 1851, as the name of the redefined Thlypopsis (Burns et al. 2014, 2016; SACC 730).
